

New directions in improving the diagnostic process

Diana Veronica Costache - Pulmonology Clinical Hospital, Iasi, Romania

November edition of Medica Academica magazine, 2015

Statistics show that, benefiting from the current medical system, each of us has a very good chance to receive a wrong diagnosis at least once in our lifetime, some of them with devastating consequences. This paper presents the findings of a study by the Institute of Medicine in the United States that sets out eight fundamental directions to improve the quality of medical service.

Diana Veronica Costache, costachedianaveronica@gmail.com